INTRODUCTION

Do you want to earn more publicity and media coverage? Writing a compelling pitch or media release is a good start, but if you really want journalists to pick up your story, you need to pitch to the right person. It's not always clear which outlet is best for your audience or if a journalist will even pick up your story.

Instead of blindly sending dozens of pitches that go nowhere, you should use your media resources more strategically. The more relevant a pitch is, the better your chance of scoring a feature article or broadcast spot. That's why every organization needs the Saskatchewan Media Directory.

Our media list helps you make the most of your pitches by ensuring you're reaching the right media outlets and journalists. Think of our media directory as a list of journalists you can contact whenever you have a relevant pitch.

Our annual directory contains a detailed listing of all the media outlets in the province, from daily newspapers to radio broadcasters and TV stations to new and emerging digital publications. Since not every story is necessarily mainstream news, we've created a specialty publications section that contains a detailed list of magazines, newsletters and e-blasts spread across a variety of sectors such as agriculture, culture and history. Take advantage of this section to target your media releases to the publications they're best suited for.

Each year we review and update contact information for all media outlets, while adding new ones and taking out ones that are no longer in operation. Instead of constantly updating your media list, this publication ensures that you can devote your resources to developing and refining the communications pieces you submit to the media.

Getting media coverage is really about preparation and diligent execution and knowing who you want to reach, and crafting a story idea that's personalized and relevant to that journalist, editor, blogger or producer. The Saskatchewan Media Directory makes that task so much easier.
